Introduction

This online platform will be linked to daily updating/information emails. We aim to collect and communicate information related to religious actors responding to the COVID-19 pandemic, organizing information so that it can be quickly found and used by development policymakers and practitioners and religious actors who seek to work together in the COVID-19 response. The initiative follows from a March 11, 2020 meeting at the Berkley Center at Georgetown University: "Consultation on COVID-19: Exploring Faith Dimensions" (find event summary here).

The focus will be: (a) to link actors and observers focused on religious response and a broader policy community; and (b) to center attention on the most vulnerable communities (refugee communities for example). The daily email note (sign up here), will come from the Berkley Center account and highlight new developments linked to religious responses and questions.

The organizers of the March 11 meeting, Katherine Marshall (Berkley Center for Religion, Peace, and World Affairs at Georgetown University), Olivia Wilkinson (Joint Learning Initiative), and Dave Robinson (independent consultant) will initially take on this mission; we welcome support from others. Please note that we will post selectively, taking care not to duplicate other efforts, to curate information from trusted sources, and to avoid overloading information channels.

The platform will organize information in several categories, starting with recommendations on reliable sources of information about the pandemic itself. It focuses on (i) responses to directives to limit physical gatherings and their implications for religious communities; (ii) specific practices and adaptations of practices, messaging and advocacy, and countering negative religious voices; (iii) specific outreach to vulnerable people and communities; (iv) major advocacy efforts linked to religious actors; and (v) reflections on long term impacts and lessons.

The team plans to curate the online platform. Anyone can send information to us (at covid19.faithresponse@gmail.com) and we will post relevant material. We will send one update per day highlighting a topical issue related to religions and COVID-19.
