Assessing the city

Why use this Bible study?
This Bible study can help us explore some biblical principles as we plan projects and actions.

Rebuilding the city walls

Read Nehemiah 2-4. The Babylonian army had besieged and destroyed the city of Jerusalem, including the walls, and the population of Jerusalem was displaced, largely to Babylon. Nehemiah was a Jewish captive in Babylon, working as a trusted servant of King Artaxerxes. In Chapter 1 he feels very sad when news reaches him about the condition of Jerusalem. Its walls and gates are still in ruins. He prays fervently and begins to plan his return to the city to rebuild it.

Key points
- Nehemiah gets permission and assistance from the king, who is not a believer. This highlights the importance of working with secular authorities and the potential to access additional resources (2:4-9).
- Nehemiah makes an assessment of damage to the walls, so the project is based on a clear understanding of the problem. Good assessment data is needed before a church and the community embark on a disaster response project (2:11-16).
- Nehemiah illustrates well an orderly approach to reconstruction, as each step is laid out with plans and reviewed regularly (2:11-18). From the start, he experienced opposition, and people mocked and ridiculed him for what he was trying to do (2:19-20). He developed ways of countering and resisting this, depending on God.

Questions for discussion
- How does Nehemiah get permission to go back to Jerusalem? How much importance does he give to prayer? (2:1-6)
- How does he obtain the resources he needs to start his building project? What are the advantages and disadvantages of working with the government authorities? (2:7-9)
• What does he do when he arrives at the city? Why does he wait three days before inspecting the walls? Why does he go at night with a small group of people? (2:11-16)
• The building work is carefully planned. What are some of the points in Nehemiah’s plan? (3:1-32, 4:16-18) How much time and effort do we give to praying and planning a project?
• Does everyone support what Nehemiah is doing? (4:3, 7-9) Why do some people oppose his building work? What sort of opposition might we expect as a church?
